

fig. 1: A distressed puffer fish

When threatened, the puffer fish (Arothron hispidus) rapidly swells to over three times its normal size, in order to discourage opponents. But while first impressions may be rather dramatic, the poor puffer fish can only keep up the illusion for a matter of time. If this sounds like your idea of a typical law firm, we invite you to talk to one of the 140 specialists at our Brussels office.

Stibbe. Specialists through and through.