

fig. 2: A male frigate bird, courting

The male frigate bird (Fregata magnificens) spends most of his life in the air. But once a year, during mating season, he will land and try to seduce females by inflating his bright red throat. In the legal world, we call this process ‘pitching’. A short, intense display of talent to attract clients, after which the key people somehow seem to vanish. At Stibbe, however, we take a different approach. Having spent decades building up a team of 140 specialists, we make sure our clients get the best people all year round. So we can impress you every time you need us.

Stibbe. Specialists through and through.
